BORING! Nothing happens. You walk around a "crime scene" and look for "evidence". Instead of using forensic equipment, you walk just past the "evidence" and a text box pops up. That's the game. You don't do much investigating. It's a waste of money.. Dead Noir The Heart is a basic investigation game that left me underwhelmed.

You can find a about 15 minutes of gameplay with commentary here:

Theres not much to be said about this game, mainly due to there not being much to do in it.

You play Jackson Corpse, a retired cop who now does freelance investigations for the police. Your asked to investigate a crime scene, that ends up being a chain of crime scenes.

The investigation part of the game is simplistic, you walk around the room until you get near enough to something of interest then a prompt to investigate comes up. This is repeated multiple times per crime scene until you have found them all. Once all clue are found you can then use "detective vision" to see the flow of what happened.

While the premise is interesting, and I liked how the description of information found is tied into the scene, the implementation is simplistic. Its not hard to find the clues, with most found in a few minutes and I almost felt I could have just watched the game do it for me and got the same experience. That's a shame as I can see what the developer was going for, but it just doesn't hit the mark.

As stated, the game is controller only, but I don't see why there isn't mouse and keyboard support as there is no advantage to using a controller.

The graphics are simple, and I found that sometimes the items are clipping into each other. This is especially obvious with the woman that you speak too, who was always looking in the wrong direction and seemed to be part of the chair she was sitting on. The background music was fine, but the game had no way to turn it down or off if that was your preference.

For me, the game didn't hit the mark. I don't regret buying it, but I wouldn't recommend it to anyone I know.
